Social heartland

Step 1: See it. Step 2: Pin it. Pinterest mania sweeping the Web has Midwest roots

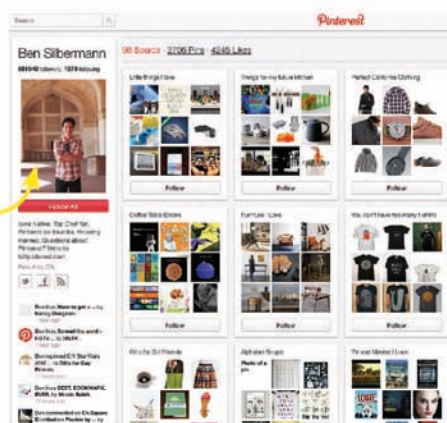

Chicago Tribune

Believe it or not, the Internet's hottest new social media darling has Midwestern roots.

Pinterest, the online bulletin board that is attracting millions of new members each month, was dreamed up by Iowan and Yale University graduate Ben Silberman two years ago. It has been attracting women in droves with its eye-candy photos of do-it-yourself crafts, fanciful recipes, dream kitchens and wedding inspirations. The site is in essence an idea factory, where individuals create their own set of virtual display boards, "pin" photos of things that inspire them and share them with friends and followers.

This isn't your typical Silicon Valley start-up. Unlike Facebook and Twitter, which first gained traction among young adult men living on the U.S. coasts, Pinterest found its first followers in the heartland. The biggest fans initially were middle-age moms living in cities such as Minneapolis and Chicago, eager to swap recipes and share tips on decorating their homes and raising their children.

"Many of the first people to try the site [pinners] were from my hometown, Des Moines," said Silberman, 29, reached by email at the company's headquarters in Palo Alto, Calif. "As they invited their friends and family, more and more people from the Midwest joined."

After moving to California to work for Google, Silberman decided to build a website that would allow people to put their collections online. He started the company in November 2009 out of his apartment and quietly launched the site in March 2010, inviting people in his personal network to join.

Pinterest went unnoticed for almost a year. Then it caught fire.

By December, the number of U.S. unique visitors to Pinterest soared to 7.5 million, up from 418,000 in May, according to comScore Inc., a Chicago-based Internet research firm. That is a steeper ascent in traffic than the early days of Facebook, Twitter or MySpace, comScore analyst Andrew Lipsman said.

"There is something about the site that's so inherently viral," Lipsman said. "That's why it's growing so quickly."

Pinterest has been a boon in particular to the mommy blog community and to artisan shopping website etsy.com, helping bloggers and designers find a wider audience.

Since joining Pinterest in April, Amy Clark, 34, has seen the number of unique visitors to her blog, Mom Advice, jump by 100,000 page views a month.

"I really think this has changed the ballgame for us, because it brought in people who haven't been reading blogs before," said Clark, who is raising a family in Granger, Ind.

Pinterest also is catching on beyond the Internet.

Nicole White, a 21-year-old newlywed in Loganville, Ga., is hosting her first Pinterest party—asking 10 girlfriends to make a dish from a recipe on Pinterest and to work on a craft project that they found on the site. White, a graphic designer, added a "Pinterest Party" invitation to her line of party stationery and is selling it on her Etsy site.

"It's a great way for businesses to get their ideas out there because it goes very viral, very fast," White said. "That's the coolest thing to me."

Trying to pin down cash flow

Chicago Tribune

So how will Pinterest make money?

It's clear the website has potential to drive business to big retailers as well.

National retail chains from Gap to West Elm have started to experiment with Pinterest, testing how to connect with a prime group of potential shoppers: women in their 30s and 40s who make a lot of the purchasing decisions for their households.

Whole Foods Market has rallied more than 11,000 followers since joining Pinterest in July. In a nod to how quickly followers could get turned off by outright product promotions, the supermarket chain stays away from photos of brand names and instead concentrates on topics that interest its customers: fitness, the environment, kitchen gadgets and, of course, food.

"When we started, we were repinning images from other websites and from blogs," said Michael Bepko, global online community manager at Austin, Texas-based Whole Foods. "We slowly started to realize this is a great way to drive people to our recipe database."

Nordstrom, which has more than 8,000 followers, looks to its most popular Pinterest pins to get a read on what customers like, said Colin Johnson, a spokesman for the Seattle-based specialty department store. For example, an $86 hugs-and-kisses pendant necklace made from gold-plated "x" and "o" charms has had more than 90 pins in the run-up to Valentine's Day, he said.

As they were with Facebook, some users are worried Pinterest will lose its folksy charm as big brands move onto the site. Officials aren't discussing the role retailers will play in the company's future, but there is at least one sign merchants are here to stay.

Pinterest just debuted a red "Pin it" button that makes it easier for members to pin images from online catalogs to their boards. The button is starting to appear on shopping sites alongside Twitter's "Tweet" and Facebook's "Like" buttons.

Does this pose make you randy?

Stephen Markley

» redeye@tribune.com

The San Francisco International airport recently built a “yoga room,” where itinerant travelers can get a few down-dogs in before catching a flight. The unintended consequence of this may be a precipitous increase in attempts to join the “mile-high club.”

Allow me to explain.

Yoga, for better or worse, is taking over the world. A recent article in The New York Times alleging the injury potential of yoga got more coverage, umbrage and yuppie outrage than the wars in Afghanistan and Iraq combined. More pernicious and under-reported, however, is that yoga is drastically raising our country’s Gross National Horniness.

Yours truly has been attending yoga classes for a year now, and contrary to what I feared, the problem is not that yoga is emasculating but that it makes you want to hump lamp-posts.

At first, I thought this might be due to the demographic of yoga classes, which is 75 percent straight babes in tight pants. Being a demure feminist who at all costs does not want to be the creep who takes yoga classes to stare at girls’ butts, I spend most of the class focusing not on my chi breathing but on avoiding glances at the wall-to-wall mirrors where girls’ butts extend in infinite fields like some kind of M.C. Escher sketch. Therefore, I mostly study the knots in the hardwood floors (I’ve practically given them all names).

Yet it was outside of class that I was feeling considerably more amorous, and this is coming from someone who needs a spike in his sex drive like the American military needs another $700 billion in funding. I’ve had the sexual appetite of a psychotic pubescent since I was maybe 4 and rubbing up against the mats during preschool naptime (fantasizing about my hot preschool teachers before I even knew what exactly those fantasies should entail—though I will admit my King Kong action figure usually played a role). Making me hornier is like building 15 superfluous aircraft carriers to patrol the waters off the coast of the Netherlands.

Finally, though, I discovered I’m not some weird pervert. Times columnist Maureen Dowd pointed me to a book by science writer William Broad called “The Science of Yoga: The Risks and the Rewards.” In it, Broad describes “a small trove of illuminating reports and investigations” that found yoga “can in fact result in surges of sex hormones and brain waves, among other signs of sexual arousal.”

Broad says, “The findings may also help introduce into the consumer society a number of practical methods for the treatment of sexual disorders and the revitalization of sex lives.”

Boomtown.

My question for readers in the yogastocracy: Do you agree with this physiological assessment? Are you a hornier individual since beginning yoga and, if so, how do you cope with the “surge of sex hormones” that at night makes your pillow look like—depending on your orientation—Jessica Alba or Channing Tatum?

And I want an answer other than “Catch a connecting flight out of San Francisco and spend the whole plane ride hovering by the bathroom.” I already thought of that.

THE DIGIT

The city of Chicago has agreed to pay a South Side family $700,000 to settle a 2006 lawsuit that alleged a group of rogue police officers extorted thousands of dollars during a series of armed raids at the family's home, according to the family's attorney.

Woman dies after collision

A 24-year-old woman died after her car hit a tree on Lake Shore Drive early Sunday, officials said. The crash happened at 2900 South Lake Shore Drive about 4:45 a.m., police said.

2 charged in bank robbery

Two men were charged and ordered held without bond in connection with a bank robbery that occurred Friday in Portage Park, officials said. They robbed the bank of $5,490 in cash, according to the official complaint.

Police shutter unlicensed club

Police shut down a party early Saturday morning after getting a report of a person with a gun and arriving to find an unlicensed “social club” called Cash Money on Deck. The club occupied the first floor of a building on the 3400 block of West Lake Street in East Garfield Park.

Several saved from North Side fire

Police officers and firefighters rescued several people, including a critically injured 3-year-old girl and a man using a wheelchair, from a North Side apartment building Friday, officials said. Four adults were injured in the fire in the 2300 block of North Clybourn Avenue.

Arrests made in iPhone robbery

Two men have been arrested in connection with the robbery of a man's iPhone outside a dry cleaning business in Wicker Park. There's no indication it is connected to more than a dozen other robberies that have occurred recently in that neighborhood and others surrounding it, police said.

Man plunges to his death in Loop

A 78-year-old attorney apparently leaped to his death Friday morning from his office building across the street from City Hall in the Loop, authorities said. The man was dead on the scene at 111 W. Washington St. TRIBUNE

2 Russia, China block UN action on Syria

Western and Arab states voiced outrage Sunday after Russia and China vetoed a U.N. resolution that would have backed an Arab plan urging Syrian President Bashar al-Assad to give up power, and Washington vowed harsher sanctions against Damascus.

3 NGO workers face charges in Egypt

Egyptian investigators filed criminal charges Sunday against at least 40 international civil society workers, including 19 Americans. The nongovernmental organization workers are referred to trial on charges of involvement in banned activities and receiving foreign funds illegally, according to state media.

4 3 Tibetans set themselves on fire

Three ethnic Tibetans set themselves on fire in the Chinese province of Sichuan on Friday, according to a rights group report that if correct would bring the total number of self-immolations to 19 in less than a year. The self-immolations are said to be in protest of Beijing's policies toward Tibetan culture and religion.

5 Police clear Occupy D.C.

Police removed protesters as they confiscated bedding and most tents Saturday from an "Occupy" protest site just blocks from the White House, enforcing a no-camping rule for the public McPherson Square they had ignored for months.

Europe faces 'tragic' cold

6 LONDON Heavy snow left several Italian villages paralyzed and without power as winter weather and cold temperatures spread across Europe, the mayor of one village said.

Many of the 32 villages in the Aniene Valley, near Rome, lost electricity Friday when an electric pylon fell because of the snow, said Piero Moscardini, mayor of Vallinfreda.

The valley, home to about 50,000 people, has received some 39 inches of snow, Moscardini said.

"It's the worst snow since 1956," he said. "The situation is tragic. We need the Army to save us."

Ambulances cannot traverse the roads, he said, and some villagers cannot reach their stables to feed livestock.

Meanwhile, deaths continued to increase from the cold. In Romania, four people died on Saturday and another six on Sunday, authorities said. A total of 34 people have died since the cold snap began in late January.

Ukraine appears to be the worst affected so far, with Poland, Romania, Serbia and Belarus also suffering much more severe winter conditions than usual.

A total of 122 people froze to death in Ukraine since the cold spell started more than a week ago, the state-run news agency Ukrinform reported Saturday, citing government ministries. More than 1,500 people have been hospitalized, it said.

In Poland, TVN Poland said a total of 53 people have died, eight of them in the past 24

Romney shifts focus to Obama after Nev.

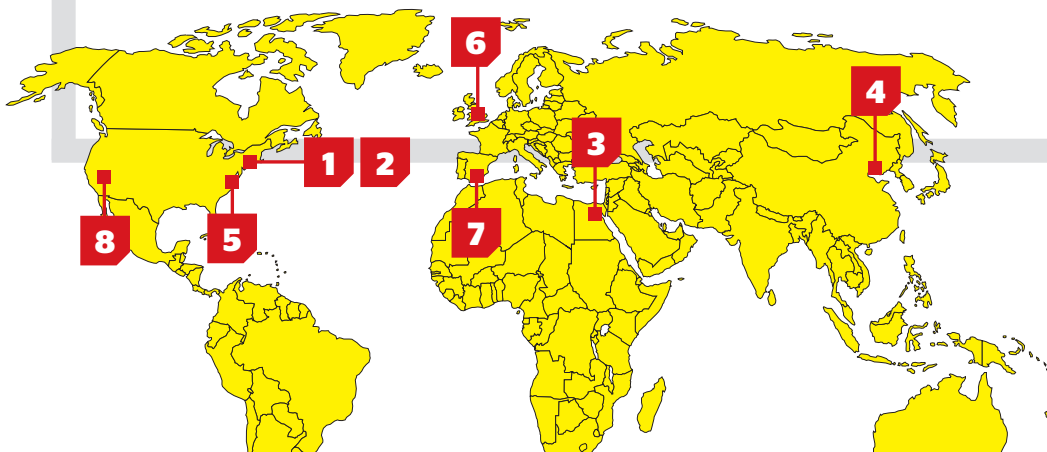

8 LAS VEGAS Declaring victory in Nevada's Republican presidential caucuses Saturday, Mitt Romney again turned away from his GOP rivals and toward President Obama.

With 71 percent of the votes counted, Romney held about 48 percent of the vote, while former House Speaker Newt Gingrich had 23 percent and Rep. Ron Paul had 18 percent.

Romney thanked supporters at his campaign headquarters in Las Vegas. But then he turned his attention to Obama, saying Nevada has had enough of his kind of help in fixing its home mortgage crisis and that he failed at bringing down unemployment.

Rather than the traditional post-vote speech, Gingrich held a news conference in which he accused the Romney campaign of spreading rumors that he would drop out of the race, calling it "their greatest fantasy."

Gingrich reaffirmed his commitment to stay in the race, saying, "We will continue all the way to Tampa," where the Republican National Convention will be held in August.

THE DIGIT

8.3% That's the current U.S. unemployment rate, a three-year low, according to a Labor Department report released Friday. The economy added 243,000 jobs in January, the most in nine months.

Chicago Tribune

So, were the Super Bowl ads—the culmination of months of planning, research and spending—kind of anticlimactic?

By the time the game aired Sunday on NBC, most everybody who really wanted to had already seen the event's most anticipated advertisement, Volkswagen's follow-up to the Darth Vader-starring, "Star Wars"-themed spot that topped most ratings of ads that aired last year.

In the belief that the game is now just a point on the marketing continuum, VW released the commercial last week, letting the world know just how dogs and "Star Wars" figure into its push this year for the new Volkswagen Beetle. Turns out that like more than 100 million Americans, folks at the "Star Wars" cantina apparently watch football, and the ads.

For a marketer, "the Super Bowl is really not a game on a Sunday afternoon anymore," said Brian Thomas, general manager of brand marketing at Volkswagen of America. "The Super Bowl is almost a three-week PR and social media campaign, and you have to think of it that way."

More and more advertisers do. Setting aside network promos and movie ads, roughly half of the spots that were slated to run Sunday evening—during the moments when the New England Patriots were not playing the New York Giants for the National Football League championship—already were available on the Web by Wednesday to be shared, excerpted, covered, discussed and even reviewed.

This was the highest proportion yet of early unveilings, experts said, meaning viewers who had sought out ads in advance could experience deja vu during the game itself—or the opportunity to take an actual bathroom break.

Among the ads whose exact content was held back until the game, many were "teased," often with productions nearly as elaborate as the ads themselves.

Volkswagen, for example, struck advance gold with a 64-second Web spot with dogs

The quick and dirty on Sunday's more memorable ads. Lots of car stuff this year. TRIBUNE, REDEYE

VOLKSWAGEN BEETLE

Premise: Couch-bound pooch sees the new Beetle passing by but is too fat to chase. He works out. He gets to tear after the car.

CHEVY SONIC

Premise: The cute little compact undertakes a series of stunts, from a barrel-roll jump to appearing in an OK Go music video.

CLINT EASTWOOD FOR CHRYSLER

Premise: Hollywood legend follows up Eminem's memorable pro-Detroit message from last year.

TOYOTA CAMRY REINVENTION

Premise: Toyota has remade its best-selling family sedan—and other things too, from babies to rain. Hot people double as furniture, for instance, and the improved rain actually makes folks thinner.

DOGS!

Premise: Skechers put a French bulldog in running shoes. Bud Light gave us a rescue dog ("Weego") trained to serve beers, even rolling out a keg. Budweiser showed a Dalmatian. And, of course, VW had the self-motivated pooch in training.

Kind of like a Toyota ad, only with better seats and a less bumpy ride.

ACURA

This one, featuring Jerry Seinfeld and Jay Leno, is like a posher Honda ad. The luxury cars' appearance in the game signals a belief that the down economy has led to pent-up new-car demand.

DANNON YOGURT

What to serve with chips and beer? Greek yogurt! In the spot for Dannon's Oikos product, John Stamos stars in a breakfast-table romance tale designed to emphasize that the product tastes good.

barking "Star Wars" music, and Bridgestone produced an ad anticipating its actual ad.

"Not only are they recognizing the power of social media, but these ads cost so much that they're trying to get the most bang for their buck," said David Shoffner, public relations strategist for the Pavone advertising agency in Harrisburg, Pa., which tracks Super Bowl advertising closely through its spotbowl.com website.

"These are spots that really live on for a year or more."

Such widespread unveiling calls into question the traditional Super Bowl ecosystem, in which people gather at parties to watch the whole spectacle, from game to ads to, this year, Madonna at halftime; critics judge spots as they air during the game; and ad ratings rendered by average audience members, such as those run by USA Today, YouTube and Facebook, get big buzz the next day as the popular verdict is made known.

"I kind of like to see them on the day," said Mark Renshaw, chief innovation officer and a digital marketing expert for Leo Burnett Chicago, which did not have an ad in this year's game.

"I'm not sure I really agree with the releasing ahead.

"To me, if I was going to release something [ahead of time] to a community of fans, I wouldn't be releasing a film. I'd release a setup to it. On the day you would connect the dots."

SUPER BOWL XLVI MOMENTS THAT WILL LIVE IN INFAMY—OR NOT

RedEye

The biggest football game in the world often comes down to a few memorable moments. Either on or off the field.

David Tyree's helmet catch. Janet Jackson's nipple. Santonio Holmes' tiptoe score. William "The Refrigerator" Perry's 1-yard scoring run.

All etched into our collective consciousness.

Super Bowl XLVI, featuring the N.Y. Giants and New England Patriots, could only hope to produce such a moment.

With that said, RedEye was on the lookout for the big moments from Sunday's game in Indianapolis. Here's what stood out to us.

US PRESSWIRE

For all the talk about Patriots quarterback Tom Brady's experience, poise and skill, it was his complete breakdown in the end zone on New England's first possession that resulted in New York's first score when he was called for a safety. A safety.

SCORE: Giants 2, Patriots 0

1st QUARTER

If you watched NBC's pregame show—all five hours of it—you got sick of hearing about Victor Cruz and his salsa dancing touchdown celebration. Well, as it turns out, it was for good reason: Cruz caught a perfect Eli Manning pass with 3:29 left in the first quarter to put the Giants up 9-0.

SCORE: Giants 9, Patriots 0

THE STARTING LINE

» Bulls at New Jersey, 6:30 p.m. CSN

2nd QUARTER

It might not be on the level of the David Tyree helmet catch of the 2008 Super Bowl, but Hakeem Nicks' leaping, 18-yard catch over the middle in the early moments of the second quarter was indicative of the Giants' passing game. Manning and his arsenal of receivers can strike all over the field and there's seemingly no catch they can't make.

The Pats go from goal line to goal line to take the lead. And who was the star of the drive? Not Brady. Not Rob Gronkowski, but Danny Woodhead? Woodhead, the same guy who scored no touchdowns in the regular season or playoffs up until now, but he gave New England a 10-9 lead when he caught a 4-yard pass to cap a 96-yard drive.
SCORE: Patriots 10, Giants 9.

REUTERS

In what could turn out to be a turning point in the game, Aaron Hernandez makes his sixth catch count as he scores from 12 yards out. At this point, Brady and Co. have had back-to-back drives of 96 and 79 yards. That's how you control the game.
SCORE: Patriots 17, Giants 9

3rd QUARTER

In what seemed like a quiet third quarter, one of the biggest moments was Patrick Chung's teeth-rattling hit on Giants receiver Hakeem Nicks along the sideline halfway through the period. Nicks was shaken up, but he returned to the game. Look for it on the highlight reels Monday.

With the game in the balance—3:40ish left—and the Giants down by two, a double-covered Mario Manningham makes a miraculous, 38-yard catch along the sidelines that puts New York on the 50-yard line and in prime position to take the lead in the waning moments.

4th QUARTER

It's been an aerial show for most of the game, but Ahmad Bradshaw scores a touchdown with less than a minute left to put the Giants up by four. What makes it memorable is that Bradshaw backed off at the goal line and appeared to attempt to go down in order to use more time on the clock, but eventually fell into the end zone to give New York the lead.
SCORE: Giants 21, Patriots 17

1 How can you tell on Monday morning a co-worker lost a Super Bowl bet?

Look for a pink Victoria's Secret thong where a hat might normally be.

He suddenly "decided" that having eyebrows was played out, so he "cut them off."

When he's at my cubicle doing the chicken dance wearing a Justin Bieber T-shirt, right Ernest?

He's wearing Uggs, a Brady jersey and a bag over his head (or mom jeans and an Eli jersey).

Because I work with Spain—ESPN 1000's bookie.

2 There was so much Super Bowl pregame ...

... Eli Manning's hair and Rob Gronkowski's ankle signed development deals for shows on E!

... that just like real pregaming, I passed out before anything fun happened.

... I thought it was for next year's Super Bowl. Sheesh!

... I ran out of Cristal before kickoff!

... Kelly Clarkson looked skinny to me. Damn goggles.

3 What's the worst part of Super Bowl Sunday?

Getting drunk a little too early before kickoffasdjkhfsjkd!f—

People find dumb reasons to root for a team. "Oh my uncle's chef was a Giants fan."

The line for the restroom.

Dreading waking up for work the next day.

The hangover. Didn't you hear what I just said? Kelly Clarkson looked good to me!

4 What sporting event deserves the hype the Super Bowl gets?

The only other athletic competition that's full of just as much crap: the Nathan's Famous hot dog eating competition.

Pick one: Wrestlemania, The World Cup, Happy Hour.

WRESTLEMANIA! It's John Cena versus the Rock, ya'll!

My Sunday Funday bowling league playoffs. Go Team Will Bowl For Boozel!

I've already started the countdown to the BP Cup. Baseball is better when you appreciate a dumb trophy.

5 How would you suggest Luol Deng manage his wrist pain while playing?

Tap Joakim Noah as his designated "Call of Duty"-er.

Stop jerk-uh ... stop jerking us around and ice that thing! (Whew, that was close.)

Alternating hot and cold compresses. And vodka.

Rub some Icy Hot on it and pray for the best.

Every now and then it's going to hurt, but that's part of the fun of a Deng bang.

Cyber Girl gets handsy with Sony's new gaming gadget

PLAYBOY'S PLAY GIRL

“I think it's going to be wildly played and appreciated.”

By Ryan Smith

FOR REDEYE

Chicagoans eager to get their hands on the PlayStation Vita—Sony's newest handheld device landing in stores Feb. 22—can get a test spin this month in Wicker Park.

Sony has opened a pop-up store at 1444 N. Milwaukee Ave. that lets inquiring gamers hang out and try out Vita for free. Chicago is one of the eight U.S. cities hosting the exclusive Vita showcase, dubbed the “Vita Hill Social Club,” through Feb. 27.

To hype the store's appearance in Chicago's epicenter of cool, Sony's social partner Playboy threw an RSVP-only party last week featuring Jo Garcia—Playboy's 2008 Cyber Girl of the Year and creator of playboy.com's “Gamer Next Door” gaming blog.

Garcia talked to RedEye about what to expect from the Vita and how she still is fighting off stereotypes about being a hot female gamer.

What are these “Vita Hill Social Clubs” all about?

I think Sony wanted to get the word out about the Vita and because it didn't launch for Christmas, the smart thing was to create these pop-up stores across the U.S. so people can get one-on-one time with it.

There's nothing that can sell a device better than you playing with it for yourself. It's something you need to touch and feel to appreciate.

How do you think gamers will respond to the Vita?

I think it's going to be wildly played and appreciated. Not only can you play high-definition games on it—no one is going to beat the looks of the game—but there's Wi-Fi and 3G capability and people can surf the Web and keep up with their friends on a smaller device than an iPad or tablet. The diversity of the games that will be available at launch is amazing. Usually you get little dorky games at launch, but you're seeing big-name titles this time.

A lot of people would be surprised that brands such as Playboy and PlayStation would be mixing. Are there still a lot of negative stereotypes attached to gaming?

It still exists, but for me it's a little bit different. For me it's not because I'm a female, it's because I'm a Playboy girl, and they don't put those worlds together. The obvious reaction is that this girl is probably too preoccupied with shopping, her hair, going clubbing and man hunting to play a video game. But I average about six hours a day. I make some guys look bad as far as time spent. I'm a Playboy girl who happens to be addicted to video games in the worst way.

The most recent statistic from the Entertainment Software Association says 42 percent of gamers are women—a greater portion of gamers than boys 17 and younger. Does that surprise you?

Nope, it doesn't surprise me at all. With social platforms and the Wii and companies creating more games that are more friendly to family, they naturally bring in women. And then it becomes like a gateway drug where women eventually get into more hard-core games.

tv 'Housewives' reboot

By Tracy Swartz

REDEYE

After six seasons, "The Real Housewives of Orange County" needed a face-lift—or at least a shot of Botox.

Bravo's longest running "Real Housewives" reality show shook up the cast by adding—spoiler and shocker alert—a brunette, and sending the gals to an exotic location, Costa Rica, to party.

The ladies also did some work on themselves, but not just cosmetic. Cast member Alexis Bellino, for one, got a career make-over.

The Season 7 premiere, which airs at 8 p.m. Tuesday, shows Bellino at her new job as a weekly "live celebrity correspondent" for a TV station in San Diego. Her assignment? Interview self-proclaimed "booty-ologist" Dr. Booty about "National Booty Awareness Month." (Note: A Google search for this holiday came up bare.)

Bellino stumbles a bit through her talking points and has trouble with the live booty demonstration.

So what did she learn through this experience? "There's many different women with many different shapes and sizes" of booties, she told RedEye.

And what did she learn about being a TV journalist? "It's live. When you hiccup, everyone sees the hiccup."

Bellino, 35, also experiences some hiccups in her friendships with the other castmates. Her closest friend, Gretchen Rossi, makes amends with self-proclaimed "hottest housewife" Tamra Barney, which throws the Bellino-Rossi dynamic into disarray.

The number of breakups and makeups between cast members in the first episode alone is dizzying, and the previews promise a lot of ugliness from the beautiful people. Bellino, a couture designer, is no exception.

"I had a nose job, so it's not going to be very pretty for me," she said.

Mercury is generating some wild conversations and sexy chats. You might end up making an intimate confession to a stranger and compare sexual misadventures over dinner and drinks. You're in the mood to make like-minded friends.

Pisces Feb. 19-March 20
As Venus leaves your sign, you'll notice that your love life has gone through some big changes. You might still feel like things are chaotic and weird, but that's OK. Some stuff had to be destroyed in order for better things to be created.

Aries March 21-April 19
Venus will be in your sign for a few weeks, increasing your sexual mojo. If you've been single, don't expect to be so for much longer. If you're in a relationship, you and your honey might have much more sensual fun together.

Taurus April 20-May 20
Money is on your mind. You'll be wondering what it would be like to marry a rich man or become a kept lover of an older woman. The moon is making you nervous about your cash flow. Do something about it.

Gemini May 21-June 21
Your partner could give you an ultimatum this week. Maybe your girlfriend doesn't want you to keep seeing your ex-girlfriends. Mercury says change is in order.

Cancer June 22-July 22
A friendly moon is creating a second honeymoon feeling with your sweetheart. Despite your differences, there is something really cool about your relationship. Celebrate that and have fun with your partner.

Leo July 23-Aug. 22
A romance is reaching a turning point. If you're in a relationship, you'll realize that you want more. If you're single, you could finally get some closure about an ex. Venus is helping you to see what you really want as well as what you don't want.

Virgo Aug. 23-Sept. 22
Mars says expect flirtation in the workplace or on the way to work. You could meet a sexy barista while buying your morning coffee.

Libra Sept. 23-Oct. 23
You're not usually one to complain, but even a peaceful dude or dudette like you has a breaking point. Venus is reminding you that you can't just let your lover walk all over you, unless you're into that kind of thing.

Scorpio Oct. 24-Nov. 21
As a naturally psychic Water sign, you're more sensitive than the average person. This also makes you a bit paranoid because you see the dark side of people so clearly. This week you could pick up on your lover's deepest secret, thanks to Neptune.

Sagittarius Nov. 22-Dec. 21
Friendly Venus is adding some buzz to your sex life. If you're single, you could connect with somebody new in a really hot way. If you're in a relationship, you and your partner could discover some fresh mutual turn-ons.

Capricorn Dec. 22-Jan. 19
You're in one of your whiny moods, complaining about stuff that isn't fair. The moon says snap out of it. Instead of playing victim, look at actions you've taken which contributed to your situation. Self-responsibility is a very sexy quality.

TODAY IN THE YEAR...

1956: Autherine Lucy, the first black student admitted to the University of Alabama, was expelled after she accused school officials of conspiring in riots that marred her court-ordered enrollment.

2000: Former first lady Hillary Clinton launched her successful candidacy to the U.S. Senate from New York.

In 2003: ABC's "20/20" aired a British documentary on Michael Jackson in which the King of Pop revealed he sometimes let children sleep in his bed.

Pete Wentz shuffles the deck with his new band, the Black Cards

ABOUT LAST NIGHT

INDIANAPOLIS What is the status of the Black Cards—Pete Wentz's first band since Fall Out Boy split—after the group parted ways with lead singer Bebe Rexha last month?

"We just put out a mixtape and have a couple remixes on the way," Wentz told me Sunday while taking a break from DJing Rolling Stone's Volkswagen Rock and Roll tailgate. "And we've been in the studio working on original stuff. This all has been building. It's been like a 10-month gestation of figuring out what this is. I think we've figured out where we fit in."

Black Cards performed at the opening of Wentz's club, Angels & Kings, in the Hard Rock Hotel and at Lollapalooza.

Wentz said he doesn't plan on replacing Rexha—at least not right now. He'd prefer to write lyrics and music and use various vocalists on the band's songs, which is how he originally envisioned the band.

As for Rexha, Wentz isn't sure if she will pursue a solo career, but he did reiterate that it was a "mutual decision." "Everybody always says that, but it was a mutual thing," Wentz said. "There's no bad blood. We're homies still."

In addition to the breakup of the successful Fall Out Boy, Wentz also went through a public split last year from wife Ashlee Simpson.

"I feel like it's been 10 months or a year that I haven't really reacted to the stuff happening in my life," Wentz said. "So I think the stuff I've been writing lately will be my first chance to be vocal about it."

"I feel like I'm at a point in life where I'm genuinely happy. ... I'm no longer in a dark place, which is great."

“He’s already a mature guy, but I think it’ll mature him a little more. It matures everybody.”

SUPER BOWL XLVI ALSO SPOTTED ...

» The Bears' Devin Hester and Charles Tillman hung out separately at ESPN The Magazine's "Next" party

Saturday. Also in attendance was "The View" co-host and Hoffman Estates High School alum Sherri Shepherd.

» Lupe Fiasco performed a high-energy show at Rolling Stone's Bacardi Bash. The Chicago rapper refused to do interviews at the event (which often is the case when he isn't promoting an album). "I'm not doing interviews," Fiasco told me. "I'm like on a press blackout—publicist's orders." GETTYIMAGESFILEPHOTO

» Former NFL Pro Bowler and Mount Carmel High School alum Donovan McNabb had a hard time dodging photo requests from guests at EA Sports' Madden Bowl. I also spotted former Bear and current Carolina Panthers coach Ron Rivera at the party wearing a button-down with what looked like the Panthers' team colors.

» Former Bear Jim McMahon hosted his fourth annual Swang 'N' Super Bowl Bash on Thursday. The $260-per-ticket event benefited Hope for the Warriors and the Lynda McMahon Ferguson Foundation for Literacy.

» Chicago-area native April Rose co-hosted the Maxim Tailgate: Salute to Heroes event outside Lucas Oil Stadium on Sunday.

Clear a spot in detention at Hogwarts. Daniel Radcliffe admitted he was drunk while filming some scenes for the "Harry Potter" movies during a period when he was drinking "nightly," Reuters reported Friday. Radcliffe has previously said he gave up drinking because it was a destructive influence on his life.
